

Leading Designers of New Hampshire

The Authentic Side of Beautiful Style

As a young girl in school, Amanda Raymond was told she was a daydreamer. And while it was a term meant to force her on a more narrow path, Amanda says that today, it's a term she wholeheartedly embraces.

Using every ounce of her whimsy and incredible imagination, Amanda has become one of New Hampshire's must-have designers. With a strong, technical background in architecture and design build, she's got plenty of design skill, but it's her holistic approach to design and ability to deliver on her clients' highest visions that keeps them coming back again and again.

"We love taking a little risk and have been known to break a design rule or two," she says. "At the birth of Studio Sage, I decided that in business (as in life) I would rather experience a few failures while being authentic, than find success while being something I am not. It's a trait our clients have come to appreciate and count on while working together."

As a full-service design firm, Studio Sage remains intentionally small. It's Amanda's way of ensuring that she can deep dive into every project and make sure that the experience always remains fun and personal.

"Each project is an opportunity to journey with our clients, helping them craft and execute their very personal style," she says. "We never take lightly the honor and responsibility we are entrusted with by caring for our clients' homes. We also vow to keep our projects exciting, personal, and thoughtfully executed."
